The Inaugural Address.

The 200 words of our special dispatch published in the Tuesday's issue so completely covered all the salient points in Harrison's inaugural address and struck centre so thoroughly on the cabinet appointees, that there is but little to tell. For the sake, however, of those who wish to read more of the address we condense as follows:

A considerable portion of it is devoted to a review of the National growth since Washington was inaugurated 100 years ago. He then launches into the favorite republican doctrine of protection, to which he attributes much of our prosperity, but what he says is not new or in any better shape than hundreds of its devotees proclaimed it from the stump. He charges that the South would have enjoyed equal benefits in the tariff with the North but for slavery, which made it distinctively a planting community. "I have altogether," says he, "rejected the suggestion of a special executive policy for any section of our country," and then he goes on to discuss our election laws in a most sensible and patriotic manner. As to naturalization he says we should not cease to be hospitable to immigration, but we should cease to be careless as to the character of it. There are men of all races, even to the best, whose coming is necessarily a burden upon revenues or a threat to social order. They should be identified and excluded. It will be remembered that he failed to vote for the exclusion of the Chinese when he had the chance. As to foreign affairs he is eminently conservative and his policy as expressed is a decided compliment to the outgoing administration. All useless complications must be avoided while maintaining the Monroe doctrine and insisting on our rights, and consideration should characterize our diplomacy. The offices of an intelligent diplomacy of friendly arbitration in proper cases should be adequate to the peaceful adjustment of all international difficulties. By such methods we will make our contributions to the world's peace, which no nation values more highly, and avoid the opprobrium which must fall upon the nation that ruthlessly breaks it.

On the question of the division of the spoils, in which the radicals are more interested, he says: The civil list is so large that a personal knowledge of any number of the applicants is impossible. The President must rely upon the representations of others, and these are often made inconsiderately and without any just sense of responsibility. I have a right I think, to insist that those who volunteer and are invited to give advice as to appointments, shall exercise consideration and fidelity. A high sense of duty and ambition to improve the service should characterize all public officers. There are many ways in which the convenience and comfort of those who have business with our public officers may be promoted by a thoughtful and obliging officer, and I shall expect those whom I may appoint to justify their selection by a conspicuous efficiency in the discharge of their duties. Honorable party service will certainly not be esteemed by me a disqualification for public office, but it will in no case be allowed to serve as a shield of official negligence, incompetency or delinquency. It is entirely creditable to seek public office by proper methods and proper motives, and all applicants will be treated with consideration, but I shall need, and the heads of the departments will need, time for inquiry and deliberation. Persistent importunity will not, therefore, be the best support of an application for office. Heads of departments, bureaus and all other public officers having any duty connected therewith, will be expected to enforce the civil service law fully and without evasion. Beyond this obvious duty I hope to do something more to advance the reform of the civil service. The ideal, or even my own ideal, I shall probably not attain. We shall not, however, I am sure, be able to put our civil service upon a non-partisan basis until we have secured an incumbency that fair-minded men of the opposition will approve for impartiality and integrity. As the number of such in the civil list is increased, removals from office will diminish.

The President does not regard the treasury surplus as the greatest evil, and adds there were many ways to remove it without impairing adequate protection to American industry. He favors strengthening the navy and the establishment of American steamship lines. He thinks pension laws should give more adequate and discriminating relief to veterans of the war and adds: "Such occasions as this should remind us that we owe everything to their valor and sacrifice." He spoke earnestly of the growing interest in the reform of our election laws, and said Congress should not hesitate to exercise its full powers under the constitution to enforce a pure ballot if occasion demanded it.

The address closes as follows: No political party can long pursue an advantage at the expense of public honor or by rude and intemperate methods without protest and fatal disaffection in its own body. The peaceful agencies of commence are more fully revealing the necessity of unity of all communities and the increasing intercourse of our people is the promotion of mutual respect. We shall find unalloyed pleasure in the revelation which our next census will make of the swift development of the great resources of some of the States. Each State will bring its general contribution to the great aggregate of the Nation's increase, and when the harvests from the fields, the cattle from the hills, the ores of the earth have been weighed, counted and valued we will learn from them all to crown with the highest honor the State that has most proved its education, virtue, justice and patriotism among its people.

—A large crowd attended the sale of A. D. Newland's effects Wednesday and high prices were realized. Household and kitchen furniture and farming implements brought better prices than new articles of the same kind; combined horse $150; 3 mares $30; $60 and $87; work mule $142; milk cows $18 to $32; yoke oxen $76; 3 yearling steers $16; 7 yearling heifers $17 to $19; 18 head Poland China hogs, weight 150 pounds, $7.50 to $9; corn in crib $175; shelled oats $2 1/2; hay, per ordinary sized stack $16. —Daniel Gano sold to S. B. Jones 22 yearling mules at $67.—Geringtown Times.

—Lee & Wakefield, of Danville, bought half-a-dozen geldings at Lebanon Monday at $130 to $170.

—The dream of the prohibitionist is to some extent realized in this. At the sale of the distillery property of Purdy & Co., last Saturday, Thos. Purdy bought the entire outfit, land, etc., for $1,678, that cost a few years ago about $7,000. Mr. Purdy will sell the distilling apparatus and convert the building into a flouring mill.—Lexington Standard.

—The total packing in the West the past week has been about 250,000 hogs, compared with 200,000 the preceding week. The increase for the week over corresponding time last year has been approximately 50,000 hogs. So far as can be judged from data now available the winter season will close about 550,000 to 575,000 hogs short of the packing last year.—Price Current.

—Rev. P. G. Elsom writes from Quitman, Ga.: "Please thank through your columns a number of kind Stanford ladies for a handsome silk quilt, which they sent Mrs. E. and myself last week. It is a beautiful gift, which we highly value, but we prize above all the names of these dear friends which appear on the squares. God bless them every one. Tell them I hope before many months to see them. The Lord is greatly blessing me here. I baptized 13 last week and received 4 by letter. There are others yet to come."

MATRIMONIAL MATTERS.

—A. J. Rigby, aged 20, and Miss Lucinda Likins, a maiden of 15 summers, obtained license and were married at the bride's mother's, near Waynesburg, yesterday.

—A successful Western fruit-grower keeps borers from his trees by placing small pieces of soap in the crotches of the limbs, which the rains gradually dissolve and wash down "over the stem and collar. He takes cheap bar soap that is yet green and soft, cuts it into pieces about a half inch square and about three inches long and presses that into the crotch. Such a piece will last about a year.

—Little Frank V. asked the other day, "Mamma, when a pole-cat smells himself does he think it is another pole-cat that stinks so?" Not being well up in zoology, the good lady referred the inquiring mind to its papa, whose answer we failed to get.

—The first bank in the United States was the Bank of North America, chartered by Congress at the instance of Robert Morris in 1780 and by the State of Pennsylvania in 1781, with a capital of $40,000. It is still in existence in Philadelphia.

LANCASTER, GARRARD COUNTY.

—Hon. W. O. Bradley and Gen. W. J. Landrum are Mr. Jno. Sandifer's lawyers in the trial now in court and Mr. Shelby and Tomlinson represent the railroad.

—We failed to state in our last issue that since our citizens have invested in Middleboro land they have recently found a fine marble quarry, said to be even superior to the Tennessee marble, which we all know has so long been noted for its superiority to that of many other kinds.

—At the regular meeting of the Missionary Society jointly the two societies—the Christian Aid and Missionary—presented to Mrs. G. W. Yancey a five-dollar marble-top centre table. This gift shows in what high esteem Mrs. Y. is held by the two societies in which she has long been a faithful and devoted member.

—The first of the week gayeties abounded in our city. First a hop Monday night for the dancing class and an entertainment by Cara Pryor Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday nights, and we understand there is to be a candy-pulling tomorrow night by the "Band of Hope" or the younger Missionary Society of the Christian church.

—Mr. Millsaugh, of Covington and Mr. Shelby, of Lexington, are the lawyers that are attending court here this week. Mrs. Woodford Dunlap was in Danville last week visiting friends.

—Mrs. Fannie Green, a pretty little widow of Stanford, was in Lancaster Tuesday with friends. Messrs. Ed and Napo P. and Dr. Jas. B. Kinnaird were all in your city the first of the week.

—The following is a list of the young men that have just been enrolled as belonging to the recently re-organized Company: W. J. Kinnaird, captain; Louis Landrum, 1st lieutenant; James L. Hamilton, 2d lieutenant; Thomas Eason, quar. serg.; W. O. Owsley, 2d serg.; W. H. Collier, 3d serg.; S. D. Higgins, 4th serg.

—Mort Rothwell, com. serg.; Letcher Owsley, 1st corporal; Samuel Jennings, 3d 2d corporal; John Kirby, 3d corporal; Sam Fox 4th corporal; caterer, Alex M. Iler.

—One night last week after M. D. Hughes, the editor of the News, had sought the bosom of his family quite an unusual thing happened. After the wee sma' hours of night had been partly spent he thought he heard a faint cry or noise at the door. It seemed to wait as if it wanted admittance. He said he thought it must be some late visitor seeking entrance at his chamber door.

It sounded to him more like the wail of an infant than anything else. At first he thought he would confront the intruder with a pistol, but being of a weak, timid nature he desisted and thus let the wail die away in the distance. What was his surprise and consternation the next morning upon opening the door to find nothing more or less than a dead kitten. "We must say we are surprised to find out that such a brave looking, powerfully built man as M. D. Hughes should give way to trepidation for as slight a thing as a little, puny kitten. What would he do if an animal of the genus homo should attack him.

To kill off the woman's suffrage craze there ought to be a law making marriage compulsory. Men and women who remain single at the age of 30 years should be drafted into matrimony just as soldiers into the army. Government ought to say, "Here, Smith, you have drawn 315. Her name is Jones. Hunt her up and marry her." This would be hard on some of the men, but a man who refuses to choose a wife for himself ought to be sacrificed for the good of society. There is nothing so discouraging to a woman suffrage woman as a house full of children.—Washington Post.

Visitor (dime museum)—You are not a freak, are you?
Lady—Yes.

"Beg pardon, but what is there remarkable about you?"
"I have been married ten years and I never once told my husband that I could have got plenty of richer and handsomer men if I'd wanted 'em."

Modern minister's wife—You look worried, dear. Can't you find subjects that will interest the congregation?
Modern minister (gloomily)—It is easy enough to find subjects that will interest the congregation; the trouble is to find subjects that will interest the newspapers.

No democrat for a half century has done so much to redeem the democratic name and fortune as Mr. Cleveland, and he retires with the cordial respect of a vast body of his countrymen for his patriotic purpose, his integrity and his courage.—Harper's Weekly.

Appealing to Diana, the Goddess of the Ephesians, for help, is as useless as trying to cure cholera without Garter's magic chicken cholera cure. "No cure no pay." Sold by McRoberts & Stagg, 2t

With the exception of Blaine who needs no introduction, and Windom, who presided over the treasury during Garfield's administration, the gentlemen composing Harrison's cabinet are rather obscure and unknown quantities. John W. Noble, Secretary of the Interior, is from Missouri and was born in 1831. He was promoted to brigadier general at the close of the war and was appointed district attorney by President Johnson, which he held till 1870, since which time he has practiced his profession in St. Louis. John W. Noble, postmaster general, is 51 years old and is the rich clothing merchant of Philadelphia, who bought and paid for his office, which cost him $50,000. The attorney general, W. H. Miller, is the law partner of the president at Indianapolis and has been since 1874. He has no other claim to public recognition but that fact, though it is said he is fairly capable of filling the office. Redfield Proctor, secretary of war, voted the Vermont delegation every time solid for Harrison at Chicago and that accounts for his appointment. He is the least known of the lay out. Gen. B. F. Tracy, of New York, is 59 and got his title from having been a brigadier in the late war. He was appointed district attorney for the eastern district of New York and since his retirement has made some reputation as a corporation lawyer. He is secretary of the navy. The distributor of garden seeds is Jere Rusk, of Wisconsin, and he was born in 1830. He has been governor of his State three times and has twice represented his district in Congress. He is said to be a clever old fellow, with about as much knowledge of farming as Horace Greeley possessed. The appointments were made Tuesday and confirmed within 10 minutes after being presented to the Senate. This is about all that can be told of the men who will cross their legs under the cabinet table. Blaine will rule the roost and his word will be the law, whatever may be the wishes and expressions of President Harrison.

The Lexington Leader, which is by the way the nearest in appearance and the best in get up of any republican paper in the State, and ranks with the best dailies outside of Louisville, dials out this cold comfort to the hungry horde: "Our republican friends who expect a complete change in the offices on the day after the inauguration will meet with disappointment. It will take some time to get the running-gear of the government in good order and the best thing to do is to be patient. There are a great many places to be filled, even before the claims of aspiring postmasters can be considered." The advice of our contemporary is good, but how can a starving man be patient? There are fellows who have toiled not, neither have they spun during the last four years, in hopes of getting back their places, and to tell such to be patient is almost adding insult to injury. They think they must be provided for, and that p. d. q.

WATERSON thinks that Cleveland's unwinning individuality did more to defeat him than anything else and that his retirement is final. But then Mr. W. doesn't know everything. He, however, pays the ex-president the highest compliment as an executive by saying "a more conscientious and courageous man in discharge of his official duty never entered the White House. If his experience had been equal to his abilities and his methods and his intentions, his leadership would have been unqualified and his tenure abridged only by the Constitutional limitation. He goes out having done a better part by the country than by the party, which is saying much for his patriotism."

The State of Ohio is not represented in the cabinet directly, but the president and four of his advisers were born there, while Blaine got a part of his education at Lancaster, in the same State. Speaking of Ohio reminds us that the fuss made over Buck-fuzz Foraker at the inauguration was out of all proportion to his size. He is a pigmy intellectually but what he lacks in brains is more than made up in brass and that accounts for the way in which he always manages to get there.

The Frankfort Capital says that when it was stated in the dispatches that the republican Senators contemplated expelling Senator Blackburn for pulling Chandler's ear, Gov. Buckner, with the grim look of the soldier, said: "If they do it, I shall appoint him to the vacancy by telegraph."

It will be observed that Mr. Harrison is painfully silent on the second term business. He evidently does not want his words thrown at him when he asks an endorsement three years hence. In this he shows sense. They will all take a second term so what's the use of talking.

The Times' Washington correspondent says if the commission of Internal Revenue goes to Kentucky, Col. A. M. Swope will get it. We hope this is true, for no other republican in the State is more deserving or better qualified.

HARRISON was so overcome by the effects of shaking hands with the crowd that pressed to do so, that he had to retire and recuperate his system with a long drawn out drink of old rye. This is terrible in this growing prohibition country, but the worst is yet to be told. The scenes of drunkenness and debauchery in Washington this week exceed anything of the kind ever witnessed there. Nearly everybody was how come-you-so, while a whole regiment from Pennsylvania got uproariously drunk and acted most disorderly. Harrison's coachman was also drunk and came near creating a row by recklessly driving into a crowd. It begins to look like the prohibitionists will have little to expect from the party of free whisky and taxed necessities.

Not even the meanest republican paper or politician has ever dared even to hint at fraud or corruption in connection with the administration of President Cleveland, which will go down to history as the cleanest and most patriotic since politics have cut such a figure in our affairs. He gave the country a wise, vigilant and economical administration, with absolutely no taint of extravagance or corruption, and he retires to private life with the respect and plaudits of all honest men, who admire courage and honesty of purpose in a public official. If Harrison does even half so well as he the country will have cause for congratulation.

The address of President Harrison is received with commendation by nearly all the papers, both democratic and republican. It is not a remarkably brilliant production, but it is for the most part sound, sensible and practical and if the author can live up to it, without regard to Blaine or anybody else, the country will have nothing to fear but considerable to expect from his administration. It is not very encouraging to the hungry horde who want a new deal right now. He tells them not to be importunate, as it will take a long time for him and the heads of the departments to examine and decide upon appointments.

As item is going the rounds that Chas. E. Kincaid, the Washington correspondent of the Louisville Times, will buy an interest in the Danville Advocate. We do not know anything of the truth or falsity of the report, but we take it that if the judge does so, it will be simply to invest his large accumulations where they will bring him a handsome dividend and not for the purpose of changing his location. As a correspondent he is invaluable to every Kentucky reader of his popular paper, and for one, who reads his dispatches with avidity, we enter an earnest protest against his leaving the capital city.

On the pathetic appeal of Senator Daniel, his democratic colleague, the Senate expunged from the official record that Senator Riddleberger was forcibly ejected from the Senate, though he did not deserve such consideration. Daniel laid all the trouble on Riddleberger's besetting sin and for the sake of his family begged that his actions be not recorded in the book of remembrance. It is pleasing to note that Virginia will hereafter be represented in the Senate by a pair of gentlemen, instead of by such cattle as Mahone and Riddleberger.

EX PRESIDENT CLEVELAND and wife left Washington for New York Wednesday and already the name of Grover Cleveland in porcelain letters adorns a window in the great law establishment of Bangs, Stetson, Tracy & McVeach. He will buckle himself right down to work and will soon be as distinguished a lawyer as he is distinguished as a statesman. A worker indeed is our Grover.

NO TEARS will be shed over the retirement of Secretary Endicott, who can now return to the New England hole from which Mr. Cleveland drew him and pull it in after him. He was never known to turn a rascal out or to do anything further than to sit up and nurse his dignity. Entirely too bumptious for this democratic country was William Crownshield Endicott.

HARRISON no doubt recognizes that this is a democratic country, notwithstanding he by the forms of law is made president, and that, no doubt, accounts for the conservatism of his address. The democrats polled 5,540,329 votes at the last election, which are about 100,000 more than Harrison received. The minority president is wise in going slow.

SPEAKER CARLISLE retires after six years of service as Speaker of the House with a reputation for absolute fairness never before attained by any of the numerous men who have held the difficult and trying position. He will be on the floor next session and as a leader of the democratic side he will be invaluable to the party.

The New York Sun is greatly pleased with the inaugural address, much more so than it would have been with any that Cleveland could have delivered. The rays of that luminary have long been shining brighter for the republican than for the democratic principles, although it professes affiliation with the latter party.

There seems to be but one millionaire in Harrison's cabinet after all—the hand-me-down clothing man of Philadelphia.

The new president is credited with a very thoughtful and gentlemanly act Saturday before his inauguration. He took a drive with his son, Russell, through the city and in observing the decorations he saw a banner with a full-some reference to himself and a very complimentary one to Cleveland, which some over zealous ass had hung on the outer walls of his building. It was on the route by which he and Mr. Cleveland were to go together to the White House, so when he returned to his hotel he had his unqualified disapproval of the matter conveyed to the fellow, with the request that the banner be removed. His wishes were obeyed and the measly thing hidden from view.

The funny man of the Richmond Climax thinks it the acme of side-splitting wit to refer to this paper as the Inside Journal. He has peculiar ideas of humor anyway as those who have lost the time to read his "thin column" can testify. It is a wonder, artist that he is, that he does not furnish a diagram for his jokes. They are exceedingly funny, no doubt, but even a Philadelphia lawyer can not see through them in their original state.

It is painful to observe that Gen. O'Bradley is in the soup so far as a cabinet position is concerned, but we expect to see him crawl out of the tureen into a position more in conformity with his build. The general is a great man, but his ambition is greater than his ability.

It is stated that Judge Vincent Boring, of London, will be appointed pension agent. He is a good soldier, is a splendid civilian and the president could hardly find a more capable and deserving man.
